The New Adventures of Winnie the Pooh: Friend in Deed

By Sam Rogers

Rabbit is sick and tired of Pooh Bear borrowing all his honey. He's barricading his house when Pooh comes in through the back entrance to borrow some honey. Pooh's borrowed his honey for eight straight days, you see. Reluctantly, Rabbit gives Pooh the last of his honey. Pooh's small smackerels are an understatement. Reluctantly, Rabbit gives Pooh the last of his honey. Rabbit decides to move away. Eeyore says he can't blame Pooh for moving away, but it's just a show. He wants Pooh to think he's moved away. Eeyore tells Pooh that he's been eaten out of house and honey. Pooh is horrified that Rabbit is worried that he won't come and visit anymore and goes on a search to bring Rabbit some honey. Tigger pretends to be a bee which he thinks is redickorous. Pooh says he's got the stripes for it and Piglet is dressed as a flower, however Pooh wants Tigger to buzz with more uzz and less jazz. Piglet sneezes - the bees realize they've been had and Pooh gets thrown every which way. They get Gopher to tunnel under the tree. However the bees get to them before they can get any honey. They decide to loose the bees in his tunnels. It's a dead end and they're trapped like Ratchets. They hit the bottom of the lake to which they the sprint springs up into the tree. Rabbit turns on the tap and Pooh springs out of it. Rabbit is very upset because he thinks that Pooh values honey more than their friendship. Pooh drops the honey pot and it smashes and he says he'll get some more honey right now and he begs Rabbit not to move away. Rabbit is touched. Pooh has a nightmare, promising him in his sleep to get more honey. Rabbit brings the silly old bear some honey, which in the morning, Pooh gives it to him and they share.
